ABSTRACT

A speech recognizer suitable for distributed speech recognition is robust to missing speech feature vectors. Speech is transmitted via a packet switched network in the form of basic feature vectors. Missing feature vectors are detected and replacement feature vectors are estimated by interpolation of received data prior to speech recognition. Features may be converted and interpolation may be accomplished in a spectral domain.